Wents of the richest clergymau in England, died a few weeks ago, and the amount eatonishment. He was paid nearly fifty thousand dollars for professional services. This was one of the lustances of pay enormously disproportioned to the work, which have brought so much odium on the Church of England.

zer Some time ago Mr. C. H. McCormick, the laventor of that reaper that bears his name, gave one hundred thonand dollars to endow the Old School Presbytealan Theological Seminary, at Chicago, to be paid in annual sums of twenty-five thousand dollars. He has made three payments, amounting to seventy-five thousand dollars, but declines to pay the remaining twenty-five thousand dollars, on the pretext that "the concern has been run less as a theological seminary than as a manuufactory of political preachers of the Jacobin persuasion."
